The intentions of the group also determine how the members of the group behave as they seek to fit in the group and so their behavior is ideally for loyalty to the group (Huston, 2004). Another theory of group behavior is the identity theory which is somewhat comparable to the social identity theory.

Individual and Group Behavior Learning Theories

The key assumptions of social learning theory are as follows. Learning is not exactly behavioral, instead it is a cognitive process that takes place in a social context. Learning can occur by observing a behavior and by observing the outcomes of the behavior (known as vicarious reinforcement).

Theories about groups - Changing minds

These are psychological theories about how groups behave.

Theories of Group Behavior: Commentary |
